In economics and related disciplines, a transaction cost is a cost in making any economic trade when participating in a market. Oliver E. Williamson defines transaction costs as the costs of running an economic system of companies, and unlike production costs, decision-makers determine strategies of companies by measuring transaction costs and production costs. Transaction costs are the total costs of making a transaction, including the cost of planning, deciding, changing plans, resolving disputes Pricing Decisions. Knowing how much your company spends to produce a unit of product is invaluable when figuring out the sales price. If you plan on competing on price, you will want to ensure that your product is priced lower than that of your competitors, but if you sell your product for less than its cost, you won't be in business for very long. While costing is useful for setting a normal sales price, it is also useful for determining whether or not to take special orders at lower prices. In many cases, fixed costs of production, such as rent and management salaries, are already cover Transaction costs are costs incurred that don't accrue to any participant of the transaction. They are sunk costs resulting from economic trade in a market. In economics, the theory of transaction costs is based on the assumption that people are influenced by competitive self-interest. Sunk costs are independent of any event and should not be considered when making investment or project decisions. resulting from economic trade in a market. In economics, the theory of transaction costs is based on the assumption that people are influenced by competitive self-interest. At the highest level, only markets exist, and people in the economy are free to enter into contractual agreements with each other.

Pricing Decisions. Knowing how much your company spends to produce a unit of product is invaluable when figuring out the sales price. If you plan on competing on price, you will want to ensure that your product is priced lower than that of your competitors, but if you sell your product for less than its cost, you won't be in business for very long. You can then determine the cost per unit, and compare this to your company's cost per unit. While a larger company could be expected to have a lower cost per unit than a smaller company, figuring out if the two companies are in the same ballpark can be worthwhile. Financial Reporting. Small-business owners should recognize that not all costing systems treat costs in this manner. Library Managing Business Transactions: Controlling the Cost of Coordinating, Communicating and. Decision-making Assumptions A critical managerial function is decision-making. Decisions which management must make may be classified as marketing, production, and financial. Decisions may also be classified as strategic and tactical and long-run and short-run. A primary objective of decision-making is to achieve optimum utilization of the business's capital or resources. Effective decision-making requires relevant information and special analysis of data. A basic assumption is that the best decision is the one that involves the most revenue or the least amount of cost. The task of management with the help of the management accountant is to find the best alternative. The process of making decisions is generally considered to involve the following steps
