Separated into two parts, this novel in poems exposed a continuous story of the children in Room 214. The first part of this book is labeled Great Explorers, and from the title I would have expected them to write about the places they have gone or some part of history they read about and reflected on their own lives. Instead, this piece revealed details that they noticed around them. I wish I had known of Spinning Through the Universe then, I can just imagine the fifth graders making comparisons with the characters in one book or another. As for the poetry that was dessert! Isn't that a way to get some kids interested in writing verse? Spinning through the Universe : a Novel in Poems from Room 214 by Helen Frost.
