Description:

From the Publisher One of Parenting Press's most popular books!

About the Author If you're looking for theory and philosophy, you won't find it in Jan Faull's books and columns. No ivory-tower "expert", she learned about power struggles literally from the ground up--starting as the "nap room" teacher at a child-care center. She had earned a degree in English education at the University of Washington, but there were almost no teaching jobs in 1970, so Faull found herself working at a United Way-affiliated child care center in Portland. After years of managing child care centers and working in parenting education, Faull realized she could make a difference in children's lives by working through their parents. Fascinated by the topic, she returned to the University of Washington for a master's degree in early childhood education.

Meanwhile, the families she'd led through toddler and cooperative preschool programs had graduated to elementary school and they began recommending her as a speaker for PTA and other school-based meetings and workshops. The positive reception for her practical, thoughtful advice encouraged Faull to seek a way of getting parenting education into the media. She considered approaching television stations with conventional queries, but it was a gutsy complaint that got her on the air. When KIRO-TV, a Seattle network affiliate, broadcast a comment on explaining death to children, she called up the station and told the noon news producer that she could do a better job than the station's guest parenting expert. Within weeks, she was on the news twice a month as its child development expert.

Not long after, she pursued an assignment as a newspaper columnist--but again, with no letter of application. When a charity auction offered lunch with her local newspaper publisher, Faull made sure hers was the top bid--and long before they'd gotten through the entree, she was querying him on how to get a writing job. By dessert, after she'd outlined how he and his wife could solve their toilet-training struggles, she had a job.

Today Faull continues to research answers to a wide variety of parenting questions. A frequent speaker in the Puget Sound area, she also hears from the parents who read her weekly columns in the Seattle Times and her monthly "Your Child" articles on Disney Online's family.com.

Though most parents start training their child at the early age of two, some children become ready only at the age of four. One of the most basic requirements is that your child should be able to walk and sit down. This requires a certain amount of physical and cognitive development. This will ensure that your child can go to the toilet and have the ability to pull his pants down unassisted. Other signs that indicate your child is ready for potty training are when he tries to imitate others in their bathroom habits and can express his need to use the toilet. Most urban parents now opt for the western method of potty training. All tips on Toilet Training You ever wanted in one place. No need to go anywhere else. No spam. Beginning Potty Training: The Parent's Q&A. 1. When should I start thinking about potty training? The worst thing you can do when starting on this journey with a stubborn child is begin the process too early. If they aren't ready to start, they will not cooperate. Potty or training seat: Getting a good potty seat is really key to your success. You want your child to be comfortable and feel safe on the potty. We really love the Baby Bjorn potty seat which fits directly on the toilet, but some kids prefer to start out on the floor. When it's time to sit on the potty, don't ask your child if he has to go potty because the answer will usually be no. Just take him to the potty and sit him on it. Sit him on the potty until he goes or for a reasonable amount of time (5 minutes).
