Wales is famous for mountains with the Snowdonia National Park in North Wales the most well known. However, much of Wales's diverse landscape is mountainous, particularly in the north and central regions. The mountains were shaped during the last ice age, the Devensian glaciation. The highest mountains in Wales include Snowdon, which at 3,560 feet high is the highest peak in Wales. The list reflects the 'Wales Nuttalls' classification. This list was compiled by John and Anne Nuttall in their book 'The Mountains in England and Wales, Volume 1 - Wales'. Their classification includes mountains which are over 2,000 feet high with a rise on all sides of 50 feet.
