Working Description of Participatory Language Teaching. -It is not a method or approach but it includes both so that it embraces the very essence of the relationship between student and teacher. -Elsa Auerbach is convinced that "ideal participatory classrooms probably do not actually exist; they are always in the process of becoming". Components of the Participatory Learning Experience. -It is an interactive process. -Facilitating the writing experience- depends on students age, cognitive development, needs, concerns, and proficiency level. L2 writers often require explicit instruction in grammar and vocabulary. However, teaching literature to Language students constitutes an enormous challenge. Students are not motivated to read literary works because they cannot 'appreciate' the work under study because of the difficulty of the language. So why not making use of the ICTS to facilitate understanding and motivate students to read?? These books may be of great help. Amato, R. & Patricia, A.
