

Thanks and Have Fun Running the Country: Kids' Letters to President Obama

By Jory John

McSweeney's Publishing. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Thanks and Have Fun Running the Country: Kids' Letters to President Obama, Jory John, A few days after the election of Barack Obama, kids around the country were asked to provide advice and guidance to their new president. In this collection, there's loads advice for the president, often hilarious, sometimes heartfelt, and occasionally downright practical. Students from all over the country reach out to the 44th president, speaking to the issues closest to their hearts, relating their life stories, and asking for help. Topics include the economy, education, war, global warming, race relations in America and immigration. The book also includes letters about snow cones, puppies, microwavable burritos, dinosaur projects, multiplication and the ghost of Abraham Lincoln, reportedly haunting a White House bedroom. Proceeds benefit 826 National, a network of nonprofit writing and tutoring centers around the country.

Becky Harlan/NPR. The Obama administration is rushing to tie up loose ends before packing up — protecting the rusty patched bumblebee, ending the Cuba "wet foot, dry foot" immigration policy, settling a fraud case over defective air bags and investigating police in Chicago. Obama gets 10 letters at the end of each weekday he's at the White House, and each week a few of those are from children. He'll continue to get those 10 letters until he leaves, Reeves says. Lily thinks the president should do something fun to help cheer the country up. She wrote a letter to President Obama explaining that she not only wants people to be calm, happy and safe, she has suggestions on how this can be achieved. "Please do something fun," she wrote. "Wear a tie-dye shirt and shorts to something important. Go on a water skiing trip in the Caribbean." "Thanks for the fun letter and suggestions," he wrote. "You seem like a great kid, and I can tell you've got plenty of spunk to help keep our Nation strong! And while the President was unsure about the tie-dye shirt idea, one thing he's absolutely sure of is Lily's potential. Always remember that you have a big role to play in shaping the world and making a difference in people's lives," his letter said.

Dear Mr. President Obama, I enjoyed reading the letters the kids wrote to you and I hope you liked them too. I hope you like living in the White House and you're not afraid of Abraham Lincoln's ghost in your bedroom. Congratulations on being the president of the world! You have young kids fascinated with the role of President and living in the White House, listing off details about themselves oblivious to what a President would find interesting (except that maybe Nintendo DS's were in full swing), and you have the older kids that are already turning into mini-activists. While most of the kids' concerns are simplified views of news buzzwords (please stop pollution and war), it's fun seeing the state of the world through the eyes of these kids. Read more. From the Inside Flap. Dear Barack Obama, Something happened to me: I went out to lunch at Starbucks and I wanted to buy a cup of whipped cream and normally it's 43 cents, but now it's 74 cents! The price raised 31 cents for no reason. She wrote to President Obama to let him know that the "country needs more spunk." Lily suggested that the President should make sure to do something fun and asked him to keep the country calm. (My dream job is cardiovascular surgeon.) Keep running the country! Sincerely, Lily 8 years old. P.S. Thank you for being such an inspiration. Thanks for the fun letters and suggestions.
