We created a lesson plan model for teaching high frequency spelling words to a special education resource class of diverse elementary students with learning, social, and attention problems. We applied principles of universal design for learning (UDL) and added multisensory learning centers to the framework of a traditional direct instruction. By Candice Gopaul 168,571 views. Planning lessons for my ESL class has not always been an easy one. Although formal training provided me with the basic tools of teaching, I have found that understanding the needs of my students ahead of mine is the most important aspect to take into consideration when planning any lesson. Every class is different! As teachers it is vital for us to identify the type of learners we have (i.e. visual, auditory, and kinesthetic) before planning a lesson as it makes work a little easier.
