Red Land, Black Land book. Read 104 reviews from the world's largest community for readers. A fascinating, erudite, and witty glimpse of the human si... MPM talks about life in ancient Egypt as though it were pretty much constant throughout the thousands of years and hundreds of kings. I would have preferred a more rigorous approach that distinguished between different eras. I also think that MPM went a bit too far in painting her glowing portrait of the Egyptians; they may have been sophisticated and religiously tolerant, but they also kept slaves, raided their neighbors, and constructed an empire. Red Land, Black Land is a very approachable book on the long history of Egyptian civilization. Mertz's quirky fiction style makes this a very personable approach to a discipline that can be unbearably dry. As a bonus, if one follows the series she writes under the nom de plum, Elizabeth Peters, there is a certain thrill in recognizing gods and archaeologists alike from those pages of fiction. I had purchased another book on daily life in Egypt and it was much more scholarly if you take my meaning, however while just as informative Barbara Mertz writes with a sense of humour and makes the people of this ancient civilisation seem so much more human. This article discusses Red Land/Black Land, a prototype Civilization V mod (modification of an existing game) that allows players to explore both the process of cultural change in ancient Egypt and the construction of archaeological knowledge about ancient Egypt. As a case study of scholarly game design, the article explores the project's development. Read more about how was the daily life in ancient Egypt, discover the social classes, how were they discovered the technology and more. The ancient Egyptians loved life as we're blessed with the ideal conditions like very fertile land and a beautiful climate. They considered their life to be perfect, to the point that they believed that their afterlife was the eternal continuation of life on earth. Daily life in ancient Egypt was focused on enjoying every single moment of time they had and make it memorable as much as possible. And through their observation of the harmony and the balance of the universe, they were encouraged to live in the same way in order to achieve peace and happiness with themselves and others.
