For example there are quotes and details of the love lives of subjects from tribal cultures and colorful descriptions of the mating behaviors of various primates. Perhaps some of the most interesting reading is. In this new book she explains, using the same theoretical base, the evolution of monogamy, adultery and divorce. Since these conditions are man's. CONTINUE READING. She holds that love is love no matter if it's primitives in the jungle or a couple in Starbucks. I believe that romantic love in western civilization is the love of one specific individual we pick from the multitudes. In hunter-gather societies, arranged marriage societies, pre-literate societies love is nothing like the love we experience. We agreed to disagree. I am not surprised that adultery and infertility are paramount. Darwin theorized that people marry primarily to breed. The Four-Year Itch. Hoping to get some insight into the nature of divorce, I turned to the demographic yearbooks of the United Nations. Divorce generally occurs early in marriage, peaking in or around the fourth year after wedding, followed by a gradual decline in divorce as more years of marriage go by. Author has obviously read Margaret Mead & "The Myth of Monogamy: Fidelity and Infidelity in Animals and People" by David P. Barash and Judith Eve Lipton, and borrows her facts generously from the sources above. However, while the above authors base their findings on hard science and/or personal observation (no matter how disputed Mead's work is these days), Helen Fisher is guilty of "bad science". I fell in love with the book but sadly you have really read it. The author tries to express her ideas as scientific or historic facts. Here are a couple of examples of her writing. In fact, divorce rates clearly fluctuated throughout the centuries following Christ's call for monogamy. In here the author did make a statement, which is based on false premises.

SERIAL MONOGAMY AND CLANDESTINE ADULTERY: Evolution and consequences of the dual human reproductive strategy. Considerable data suggest that Homo sapiens has evolved a dual reproductive strategy: life long and/or serial monogamy in conjunction with clandestine adultery (Fisher 1992).
EVOLUTION OF MONOGAMY Monogamy could have evolved at any point in hominid evolution. The lover expresses increased energy, ecstasy when the love affair is going well, and mood swings into despair during times of adversity. Adversity and social barriers tend to heighten romantic passion, "frustration attraction"(Fisher 2004). Page not found. In this engrossing, entertaining book, Fisher, a research associate at the American Museum of Natural History in New York City, draws on anthropology and biology to answer eternal questions about love and sex, men and women. Breezy but serious, she cites everything from chimpanzee politics to the !Kung people of the Kalahari Desert to provide details on courting styles, multiple orgasms and homosexuality. Fisher (The Sex Contract) allows that she's not politically correct, and some may be troubled by her assertions that adultery occurs in nearly every culture and that male attraction to b

While some individuals in monogamous relationships can remain faithful, there is not one species who hasn't been caught cheating. Birds were thought to be monogamous because they mate for life. How cute, right? While one poor sap sits on the egg (doesn't matter if it's male or female), the other bird flies out to find food. "Don't worry honey, I am just running to grab us a bite to eat."
